

Call one: the heads-up

One goal: they say yes to seeing a free preview of their website, and you book ten minutes to show it. Easy, friendly, curious. Let them talk.

1. OPEN (alternate A and B, note which one in the lead)

A: straight

"Hey, is this [name]? ... How's it going, [name]? My name's Miles."

B: pattern break

"Hey, is this [name]? ... [Name], quick question: would you hang up on me if I told you this was a cold call?"

"Probably" or a laugh: "Ha, fair. Give me 20 seconds, and if it's not useful, hang up. Deal?" · "Yes": "Then I'll be quick."

2. WHAT YOU NOTICED

No website

"I was just looking around [town] and noticed you guys have some great reviews, but no website or place to book. Were you gonna get around to that soon?"

Their site has a problem

"I was just looking around [town] and noticed you guys have some great reviews. I was on your site too, and [the email link at the bottom goes to a placeholder, so people who tap it never reach you]. Is someone looking after the site for you?"

Only say "great reviews" if you saw them. Few reviews? "...noticed you've been around a while."

3. WHATEVER THEY SAY: "MAKES SENSE."

"Yeah, been meaning to."

"Makes sense, it's always the thing that gets pushed."

"Don't need one, I'm busy."

"Makes sense. Most crews I talk to are. It's less about more work and more about the right work, like the bigger jobs."

"Someone's doing it for me."

"Nice. How long's that been in the works?"

"Never thought about it."

"Makes sense. Most people who get your name from a neighbor still look you up first."

4. THE PREVIEW

You made one ahead

"Well, I actually went ahead and put one together. I build websites for local businesses, and help them show up when people search on Google, ChatGPT and Claude. Would you wanna see it? Completely free to take a look."

You didn't (the usual case)

"I build websites for local businesses, and help them show up when people search on Google, ChatGPT and Claude. I could put together a quick preview of what yours could look like. Completely free to take a look. Want to see it?"

5. BOOK THE LOOK

"Great. What's the best email to send it to? ... And I'll walk you through it, ten minutes. Would tomorrow morning work, or is the afternoon better?" ... "Appreciate you, [name]. Talk then."

If they ask the price

"Totally fair. Take a look first, and if you like it, I'll give you one straight price, and it won't change."

When they push back

Agree first, then ask a question. Never argue.

"How much is it?"	"Totally fair. Take a look first. If you like it, I'll give you one straight price, and it won't change. No contract either."
"Another marketing company?"	"Ha, you probably get those calls every week. I'm not an agency. No ads, no contract, no big promises. It's just me, and I start by showing you a free preview. You decide from there."
"Word of mouth keeps me busy."	"That's the best kind. Quick question though: when a neighbor passes along your name, what do people do next? Usually they look you up. Right now they find [what you saw]."
"I use Angi."	"Makes sense. How's it been? ... Those leads usually go to a few crews at once. This is about the people already searching for you, so they call you directly."
"Just send me something."	"Happy to. What's the best email? I'll send the preview, and give you a quick call Thursday to see what you think."
"My nephew handles that."	"Love that he's helping. Most of what I look at is the Google side, what ChatGPT says about you, and keeping an eye on it each month. Happy to send him the preview too, might give him some ideas."
"Someone already made me one." (a customer, a nephew, AI)	"Oh nice, that's great. When's it going live? ... Want a free second look once it's up? The part those builders usually skip is the Google listing and what ChatGPT reads about you." Set a follow-up in two weeks.
"This technology is crazy."	"It really is. Half my job now is making sure ChatGPT actually knows you exist." Then: "Where's most of your work coming from right now?"
"I'm up a tree."	"Ha, go! When are you back on the ground, around 4:30?"
"Is this a scam?"	"Totally fair to ask. I'm at builtformainstreet.com. The preview's free, and you don't pay anything unless you want to move forward."
"Not interested."	"No problem at all. Just so I know, is it timing, or not something you need right now?" Then: "Appreciate you taking the call."
"Don't call again."	"Understood, I'll take you off my list. Have a good one." Tap Dead.

VOICEMAIL (20 SECONDS)

"Hey [name], it's Miles with Built for Main Street. I was looking around [town] and noticed you've got some great reviews but no website. I've got an idea for one, free to take a look. Give me a call at [number]. Again, [number]. Have a good one."

Same day: send the email if you have one.

Rules: Call from your business line, never your personal number. No texts to businesses. Never a range. Never promise rankings, leads or revenue. Three tries, then Dead. If you record, say so first. Tap how it went after every call.

Call two: show the preview, then one price

Before the call: have the preview link ready, and pick the plan from what you saw. One truck and a few services is Small. Most businesses are Standard. A big crew, a wide area or two locations is Bigger.

1. START EASY

"Hey [name], Miles. Thanks for making the time. Do you have the link I sent? Go ahead and pull it up, I'll walk you through it."

2. LET THEM LOOK, THEN ASK

"So this is what a customer would see when they find you. Tap call right there, it rings you. What do you think?"

Let them react. Then show why it matters:

"And here's the other half. When I asked ChatGPT who to call for tree removal in [town], it named [names]. Once this is live and your Google listing is filled out, you're the one they find. What would a few more of those calls mean for you?"

3. WHAT YOU'D DO

"To make it real, I'd finish it with your own photos and a page for each of your main jobs, get your Google listing set up properly, and set it up so Google and ChatGPT can find you. Then I keep an eye on it every month so it stays that way."

4. ONE PRICE, THEN QUIET

Small	"For you it's $600 to get it live, then $99 a month to keep it running and up to date."
Standard (most)	"For a business like yours it's $800 to get it live, then $199 a month. That includes a report every month on what Google and ChatGPT say about you, and asking your customers for reviews."
Bigger	"For a crew your size it's $1,000 to get it live, then $300 a month. That adds same-day follow-up on every new lead and a quick call with me each month."

Then stop talking and let them think. If they want less, build fewer pages, never a lower price.

5. MAKE IT SAFE, THEN ASK

"The domain is yours. No long contract, you can cancel any time with 30 days' notice. Want me to send over the agreement and the payment link? Once that's in and you send me some photos, it's live in two weeks."

If they hesitate

"What's on your mind?"

Then listen. It's usually one worry. Answer that one and ask again.

Warm: people who already know you

Same prices, same rules. Money and photos first. Never Venmo.

CLIENT #1: FINISH, THEN ASK

"Hey [name], it's Miles. I want to finish your site properly: live, one tap to call, your Google listing done. Could you send me 10 photos by Friday?"

When it's live, show him on his phone, then:

"Would you give me two sentences on what it was like working with me?"

"Who are two other trainers or studio owners you'd trust me with?"

"To keep it hosted, updated and your listing current, it's $99 a month. Want me to set that up?"

FRIENDS: ASK FOR A NAME

"Hey [name], quick favor. I'm building websites and fixing Google listings for local businesses now. Know anyone who owns a shop, a crew, a studio, anything local, whose site is bad or who's hard to find? Just a name is huge."

They give one: "Could you text them my number and say I'll call?"

A FRIEND WHO NEEDS A SITE: NO PRESSURE

"Hey [name]! I heard you might need a website for [business]. I build them for local businesses through my business, Built for Main Street. Happy to take a look if you want. No pressure either way."

Talk about the business, not your job. If she wants it, quote the plan you picked, and make the thank-you a gift ("the first two months are on me"), never a discount.

Why warm matters: your only sale so far came through a friend. Every warm conversation ends with a testimonial or a name. They add to the cold calls. They never replace them.
